A 1. E-governance Policy

The implementation of e-governance at RFNS Senior Science College, Akkalkuwa, Dist-Nandurbar, involves utilizing information technology to improve the efficiency, transparency, and accessibility of administrative functions and services. This approach can be applied to areas like admissions, examinations, student records, financial transactions, and communication. E-governance policies generally define the goals, principles, and guidelines for using technology to enhance governance procedures.

Objectives:

1. Introducing e-governance across all college operations.
2. Enhancing the college's operational efficiency.
3. Promoting accountability, transparency, and empowerment.
4. Encouraging the institution to adopt paperless documentation.
5. Facilitating fast and easy access to information.
6. Improving areas such as admissions, examinations, student records, and financial transactions.

Policy:

1. The decision has been made to adopt and implement e-governance across all college activities to establish more efficient and streamlined governance structures within the institution.
2. The college has already integrated e-governance into several areas, such as admissions, the library, academics, examinations, and accounting. However, it has now been decided to extend e-governance to additional areas within the college.

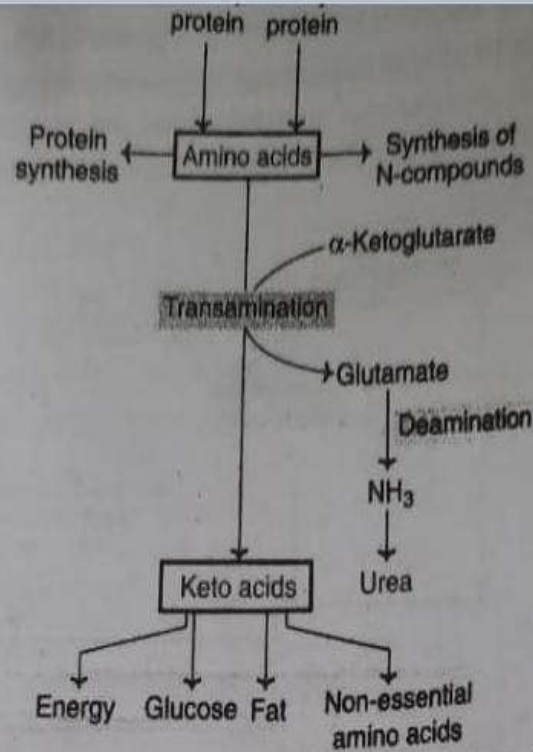

Fig 3.2. An overview of amino acid metabolism

Biosynthesis of amino acid

A. Synthesis of amino acids

1. Messenger RNA contains codons for 20 amino acids. Eleven of these amino acids can be synthesized in the body. The carbon skeletons of 10 of these amino acids can be derived from glucose. These 10 are serine, glycine, cysteine, alanine, glutamic acid, glutamine, aspartic acid, asparagine, proline, and hydroxyproline.
